

The new police building: it's bright and spacious

Chief John Harrison relaxes in his office in the new Bradford Police building. The chief now has room to display his extensive collection of crests from police forces around the world.

The bright, comfortable office is in sharp contrast to the cramped conditions of the old headquarters.

(Photo by John Slykhuis)

The interior of the new police headquarters features a large general office (seen here), an office for secretary Katherine Dumas and Chief Harrison, offices for Sergeants Jim Thompson and Spence Moore, an interrogation room, fingerprint room, exercise room, and lounge, as well as the jail cell. The police officers now have room to move.

(Photo by John Slykhuis)

The new jail is situated where the old bank vault used to be; situated so potential escapees will have a difficult time digging their way out.

Constable Bruce Davis displays the interior of the cell which, fortunately, few people see.

(Photo by John Slykhuis)